

SEDS UNLV has designed and developed a 35 lbf bi-propellant rocket engine with a resin additively manufactured thrust chamber assembly. Component and subsystem level testing and analysis was performed on the engine and ground support equipment. Resin has many benefits when developing a liquid rocket engine, but will require further research for industry level application.