

The overarching goal of the project is to investigate a new direct ink writing technique to freeform fabricate diverse ceramic-based inks into arbitrary architectures for further densification in subsequent heat treatment. The completion of the project will provide a reliable technical solution to print nuclear fuels in the future, facilitating the development of NTP and promoting crewed interplanetary missions to deep space.